David Miller, Co-Founder of Brightway Insurance, and his wife, Monique, are the generous sponsors of READ USA's Peace in the Pages event for 2023.

Brightway Insurance is one of the largest property and casualty insurance retailers in our nation, has earned recognition from Forbes as the #1 Franchise to Buy in the U.S., and has been named ten times by Inc. Magazine as one of the fastest growing privately held companies in the country.

"Our company has achieved success only because we focus on each person involved reaching their own personal potential," says David Miller, who has kept his and his company's goals aimed at improving the lives of others. Brightway's motto is WIN³ symbolizing "Win, Win, Win!" Miller's personal wins include making positive strides toward addressing public discourse, poverty, education and social justice.

David Miller was an early investor in LiftJax, working to help eradicate poverty and re-energize Jacksonville's historic Eastside neighborhood. He is an Emerald Trail Champion, tirelessly advocating to ensure necessary government funding for this environmentally healthy project. Serving on the Senior Advisory Council for OneJax, David recently invested in the Sandy Miller Metrotown Institute, named after his late mother and carrying on her lifetime dedication to building character and developing future leaders. In November 2022, David created the Together Strong Community Fund, promoting education, conversation and interaction to combat the root causes of bias in today's society. The Fund is to be administered by the Jewish Federation & Foundation of Northeast Florida with the hope of securing a safe environment in which all can gather to pray, learn and play.

As to addressing education, both David and Monique Miller were raised by readers and educators and consider READ USA to be a major factor in improving the quality of education in our community.

"My brothers and I were surrounded by books in our home. Our parents were always reading and discussing what was being read," recalls David, whose mother, Sandy Miller, was a music teacher as well as being a widely known and respected community activist. "My wife, Monique, taught kindergarten, first and second grades, her father was a history teacher and her grandfather a school principal," David says. "She literally grew up in a family of educators."

Passionate about bringing people together to address the complex issue of improving educational outcomes, David and Monique Miller are excited to be hosting READ USA's 2023 Peace in the Pages, which annually attracts and informs hundreds of supporters about the innovative READ USA programs currently underway.

Holding family always at the center of their lives, David and Monique are the parents of son Josh, and daughter Leah, and yet, they feel a deep kinship to all of the children served by READ USA. "We are firmly invested in the future of our community," says David, "and through READ USA's fabulous approach to closing the literacy gap by paving the path for youth to choose, own and learn to read books, we see a brighter way ahead for all!"

HOST COMMITTEE - Peace in the Pages 2023

Ashley Szczukowski

Host Committee Co-Chair

Ashley Szczukowski grew up in a large family (five children and two foster children) in Charlotte, North Carolina. “Our house was filled with commotion,” remembers Ashley, “and, although my mother was a reader, I was not.” The fact that Ashley was not a strong reader posed some challenges for her in school, but she was not going to fail. “I always read to the bottom of the page and as I got a bit older, I discovered that reading was a wonderful way to escape from reality.” One of the books she found inspiring was Jonathan Livingston Seagull by Richard Bach.

Since moving to Jacksonville in 2001, Ashley has distinguished herself as a passionate community leader both in business and philanthropy. She is the Director of Business Development for Danis Construction, vice-chair for Gateway Community Services’ Board of Directors, vice-president of the Jax Chamber Health Council Board and an active Chamber Trustee member. She was a Founding Member of the Healthcare Business Round Table, Jacksonville Business Women’s Group, and the Ladies Executive Golf Society, and is a member of the Leadership Jacksonville Class of 2022.

In recognition of her community leadership and volunteerism, Ashley received a full-ride scholarship to the University of North Florida through the Scheidel Foundation. She majored in public relations and minored in community leadership, graduating Magna Cum Laude in 2013.

While pursuing her successful career, Ashley Szczukowski was also raising her daughter Alexis. “I always encouraged Alexis to read books and excel at school, and she has done that,” says Ashley, proudly. “Alexis attended La Villa and Douglas Anderson School of the Arts, focusing on stagecraft, and she is currently a Junior at the University of South Florida majoring in applied behavioral analysis and working with children on the autism spectrum.”

Last year, Ashley was a member of the Host Committee for READ USA's Peace in the Pages and this year she has stepped up to leadership of the Host Committee with Sheila Cribb. "I'm excited to be leading this special effort to raise funds and awareness of the great service READ USA is doing for the children of Duval County," said Ashley, who has been a READ USA volunteer since its beginning, working at book fairs and at the BEAM Back to School annual events.

Ashley is especially impressed with the growth of READ USA's outreach, which, through partnering with Duval County Public Schools and the private sector, now includes year-round teen tutoring and teacher development in addition to book fairs in all Duval County elementary schools. "And now, READ USA has added another component ... its own Jeremy's Journey book series about leadership!" declared Ashley. "READ USA is stepping up to close the reading gap brought on by the pandemic, and continues to target poverty through promoting literacy. I'm thankful to God that I am privileged to be an instrument of this great work in our community!"

Laura Phillips Edgecombe

Host Committee Co-Chair

Laura Phillips Edgecombe is a third-generation Jaxson, having grown up in Mandarin, the daughter and granddaughter of Jacksonville natives. Her dedication to this community runs deep and, as the Director of Development for Build Up Downtown (BUD), she is a champion of positive change.

With a degree from the University of Florida and a proven career in community development, event production and fundraising for the past decade, Laura is uniquely qualified to conceptualize the “Big Picture” leading BUD, a privately funded, nonprofit resource and supporter of the Downtown Investment Authority (DIA) and Downtown Vision, Inc. (DVI). In facilitating and advocating for preservation, smart development and great public spaces in Downtown Jacksonville, Laura Phillips Edgecombe is following her heart and working toward her lifelong goal. “Our Downtown is the heartbeat of the city,” Laura says, “and I am committed to doing something for Jacksonville that will be impactful 100 years from now.”

Laura serves as a JAX Chamber Downtown Council Board Member and as the organization’s Speaker Programming & Engagement Liaison, for which she was recently honored by the Professional Women’s Council with the “Engagement Award.” A JAX Chamber Hightower Emerging Leaders Fellow, Class V (2021), she is a member of the Jacksonville Women’s Network, an Urban Land Institute Urban Plan Facilitator and a UNF Taylor Institute of Leadership Mentor. She is also an actively engaged member of NEFBA, ULI and Gator Bowl Sports. She donates her time and support to local organizations such as Riverfront Parks Now, James Weldon Johnson Park, READ USA, the Child Guidance Center, The Jacksonville Zoo & Gardens, UF Health, the Cultural Council of Greater Jacksonville, and others. Her husband, attorney Adam Edgecombe and their teenage son, Holden, are equally committed to this community.

As to co-hosting READ USA’s Peace in the Pages event, Laura is enthusiastically supportive! “I was the kid who had a book at the dinner table,” she recalls. “Literacy is pivotal in the success of our future. Everyone deserves the same opportunities, and READ USA is working to make that happen.” Laura’s favorite book to this day is one she read as a girl, titled Roll of Thunder Hear My Cry by Mildred D. Taylor. A 1977 novel that won the Newberry Medal, it was the story of the struggles of African Americans in the 1930s in Mississippi, written from the perspective of a little black girl named Cassie Logan. “It was my first understanding of racial prejudice and the truth about history. It was one of the reasons I strive for diversity, inclusion and equity today,” says Laura, noting that READ USA’s culturally sensitive programs, which include book choice and teen tutoring, are essential. “I believe we have to rally around READ USA, and help them promote liberty through literacy in our schools.”

READ USA - 2023 HONOREES

Mark Landen Memorial Award for Democracy through Journalism

Mark Woods, Florida Times-Union

Mark Woods has been the Metro columnist for the Florida Times-Union in Jacksonville, Florida for two decades, writing about slices of life, news of the city, our natural resources, our challenges and triumphs, always with words that are honest, insightful and heartfelt.

After graduating from the University of Missouri with a master's in journalism, Woods worked as a sportswriter for 20 years at newspapers in several states before taking on his present role. He has walked across Jacksonville and written a series of columns about it, covered the earthquake in Haiti, Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans, political conventions, Olympics, Wimbledon, the Masters, the World Cup and 11 Super Bowls. By far, his most exciting assignment occurred when Woods won the 2011 Eugene C. Pullman Fellowship awarded to one writer in America from the Society of Professional Journalists. As a result of the fellowship, Woods journeyed through America's National Parks from "sunrise in Maine to sunset in Hawaii," and wrote his book Lassoing the Sun (Thomas Dunne Books, June 2016).

Although Lassoing the Sun began as an ambitious project to explore the future of our nation's parks, the book evolved into a beautiful memoir when he lost his mother to cancer during his journey. Woods wrote from his heart about finding solace in the serenity of the parks and developing a deeper understanding of what it truly means to be alive.

Woods' formative memories of summers spent in the family station wagon with his parents and two sisters heading toward America's National Parks also include memories of his mother “zipping through several books while on the road.” According to Woods, his mother (a social worker) was a fast reader, while his father, a minister, read A Christmas Carol to the family at the dinner table annually and set reading goals for himself. “Dad once announced that he would read all the works of Shakespeare that year.” Books were integral in Woods’ upbringing. A trip to the library in town was considered a family outing. “Being read to was something that was part of my childhood,” he says.

Woods says he is honored and humbled to receive the Mark Landen Memorial Award for Democracy through Journalism. “I’m glad that READ USA is doing the work you’re doing,” he says. “Literacy has a profound lasting impact.”

Marjorie Broward Memorial Award

Principal Paula Findlay, Arlington Elementary School

When she was a young girl growing up on Jacksonville's east side, Principal Paula Findlay's grandmother, Anne Marie Bright, had a daycare in her home on 12th Street. As the second oldest grandchild in a large family, Paula often helped her grandmother. "I loved pretending to have school in my grandparents' house - teaching all my baby cousins," says Findlay. "I just had an innate love for children." Innate, indeed. Today, after 28 years as an educator, 15 of them as an elementary school principal, Findlay's love for children is legendary.

At Arlington Elementary School, there is an atmosphere of passion and positivity that emanates from Principal Findlay's office and touches everyone who enters through the doors. "Thank you for teaching my Dolphins!" shouts the Principal as teachers and tutors walk by in the halls. Wearing her tall, wide-brimmed READ hat and a READJax T-shirt emblazoned with the words "20 Minutes a Day Paves the Way," Principal Findlay is visibly dedicated to making sure that all of her students receive the best education possible.

"I'm blessed to have grown up in Jacksonville, and I have stayed with my roots," says Findlay, noting that she has a "13th Street Story." Having attended St. Pius Catholic Elementary on 13th Street for her first six years of schooling, then Stanton Prep on 13th and Moncrief from 7th through 12th Grade, she started her teaching career at Susie Tolbert Elementary on 13th Street in 1994 - full circle. She earned both her B.A. degree in Elementary Education and her Master's degree in Administration and Supervision from the University of North Florida, and received specialized certification at The Principals Institute - Harvard Graduate School of Education, the National Institute of School Leaders, and the Principals Academy.

During her nearly 30 years with the Duval County School District, Principal Paula Findlay has increased her large family a thousand-fold. "My students are part of my family," she declares adamantly, remembering that as a novice teacher, her classroom was her "sweet spot" and she had no interest in administration until her principal at Susie Tolbert, Dr. Pat Willis, convinced her that she could and should work for the greater good by becoming a principal.

"I love what READ USA is doing in my school," she says. "I love it, love it, love it! The fact that teenagers are working with my elementary students - teens who look like them and truly care ... I've seen the improvement. Their excitement is tangible!" Being recognized by READ USA is a plus for Principal Findlay and she is happy about it - especially happy that she will be able to help her teachers with new materials. "Teachers are not always valued as much as they should be," she says. "We are all doing the best we can for this community, and I thank READ USA for all you are doing for my Dolphins!"

READ TO LEAD

Betty Seabrook Burney, Founder & Exec. Dir. At I'm A Star Foundation

Betty Seabrook Burney is the founder and Executive Director of the “I’M A STAR” Foundation. A foundation committed to empowering and equipping youth to transform themselves into solution-oriented leaders in their schools and respective communities, “I’M A STAR” recently won 1st place among America’s largest cities in the U. S. Conference of Mayor’s Childhood Obesity grant awards and was recognized by the NAACP for dedicated civic engagement. Betty joined the Duval County School Board in November 2004 and held the distinction of serving as a two-time Board Chairman (2006 and 2011) and a two-time Vice Chairman (2005 and 2010). At the end of her term as Chairman Duval County achieved the distinction of having all chronically low-performing schools exit the state of Florida’s intervention list. She counts being the School Board representative for her alma mater, William Raines High School, as one of her greatest honors. Burney serves as a consultant for the Center for Reform of School Systems, working with School Boards and Superintendents throughout the country to provide technical assistance on governance strategies and practices designed to impact student achievement and to narrow the academic achievement gap. She is the recipient of the WJCT Public Television’s American Graduate Champion Award and was the United Negro College Funds Educator of the Year award, and serves on the Board of Directors for the Jacksonville Historical Society.

Betty Seabrook Burney earned her BA degree at the University of Miami and her Master of Arts in Public Administration at Northern Illinois University. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. Inc. and St. Paul AME Church. She deeply cherishes her family - sons Dr. Calvin and Craig, daughter-in-law Dr. Tashlai and grandson, Calvin III.

Growing up on the Eastside of Jacksonville, Betty was the youngest of Oliver Seabrook, Sr. and Helen Robinson Seabrook’s nine children, eight of whom earned college degrees. “My parents were born in 1914 and 1919 respectively and raised in rural South Carolina where their schooling only went to 6th grade, due to segregation. They both yearned for an education and pushed us to go to college,” recalls Betty. “They believed that education was the great equalizer.” Betty’s father used to put up a bookshelf with a small number of books on each shelf and challenge his kids to read as many as possible - the one reading the most books to be awarded a quarter (Big money back then!). The Seabrooks also had a Wall of Respect where their children eagerly posted certificates and awards from school. The love of reading was tangible in the Seabrook household.

“My father would have been over the moon if he could have been in 7th grade,” notes Betty, whose “I’m A Star Foundation” works with Duval County middle school students in programs such as GEAR UP (Gaining Early Awareness and Readiness for Undergraduate Programs) and sponsors a Youth Leadership Initiative for middle and high school students, and much more. “I love READ USA,” said Betty, “Especially the teen tutoring reading program that helps both the tutors and the students they are tutoring.” She is grateful and honored to be chosen by READ USA to receive the 2023 READ TO LEAD Award, particularly at this time of educational turmoil. “My life’s mission is to empower children,” she says. “Reading is education and education is knowledge and knowledge is power.”

READ TO HEAL

Nicole B. Thomas, FACHE
Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville – Hospital President

Nicole Thomas, FACHE, is hospital president of Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville, responsible for the operational and strategic direction of the largest hospital in the health system. Thomas joined Baptist Health in 2011 and in 2016 was named Baptist Medical Center South's president, becoming the first female and first African American to lead a hospital in Baptist Health's history. Through the years, Thomas has held several system roles at Baptist Health, including co-chairing its diversity, equity, and inclusion council; chairing its transformation council; stepping in as interim chief human resources officer; and serving as senior vice president of specialty services overseeing neurosciences, orthopedics, and oncology, with primary executive responsibility for the formation of Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center in 2015.

Thomas has a Master of Healthcare Administration from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and she received a Bachelor of Science in Public Health Administration from Dillard University in New Orleans. A fellow in the American College of Healthcare Executives, Thomas was named among Modern Healthcare magazine's Top 25 Minority Executives in Healthcare in 2018 and 2020 and one of 70 African American leaders in healthcare to know by Becker's Hospital Review in 2020.

Born to teenage parents in Houston, Texas, Thomas was raised by her grandparents, who doted on their smart little granddaughter and sent her to private school from kindergarten to third grade. There, reading was emphasized and encouraged at every opportunity. For instance, students who could read out loud in front of the class without pausing to sound out words were awarded with a Burger King Whopper. By the time Nicole began attending public school, she was so far advanced that she skipped a grade. "I loved school so much that I held my own private summer school, spreading out my books and treating them like my students," she recalls. When she got to high school, her grandparents again encouraged excellence, making sure she attended a magnet school that focused on choosing a profession. Her grandmother hoped that Nicole would become a doctor, however, Nicole found her leadership niche in the business of healthcare and has succeeded admirably as a Senior Healthcare Executive.

Today, Nicole Thomas and her husband, Michael, consider her beloved 88-year-old grandmother, Laverne Laviolette, their “Elder Baby,” giving her the daily affection, credit and respect she deserves.

“Because books played such an important role in my life growing up, I continue to use them as vital tools in my profession,” says Nicole, noting that she gives two impactful books to new members of her team at Baptist Health: Crucial Conversations by Patterson, Grenny, McMillan and Switzler, and Power of Moments by Heath and Heath. Both of these books promote better understanding and positive interaction between team members and, to further emphasize the power of the written word, President Thomas holds an annual “Book Club” for her leadership team. Her last book club featured Change the Culture, Change the Game by Connors and Smith.

An avid reader leader who uses books to encourage and heal working relationships and thus, strengthen the good work done for our community at Baptist Health, Nicole Thomas is a deserving recipient of READ USA’s 2023 READ TO HEAL Award. “I’m honored to be chosen for this recognition by READ USA,” said Thomas, “and I want to convey my congratulations to READ USA for the huge impact you are having on the lives of children.”

READ TO SUCCEED

Tim Cost, President of Jacksonville University

Having recently celebrated his tenth year as President of Jacksonville University, Tim Cost is gratified by all the tremendous work so many people have done to help the university achieve the success it has enjoyed over the past decade, particularly considering that his original career goals never included returning as President to his undergraduate alma mater. “I’m a corporate guy,” he protested when the late great former JU President, Dr. Frances Kinne insistently recruited him for the position back in 2013, saying, “You must do this.”

Former Executive Vice president for Pepsico, with revenues of $60 billion and 300,000 employees, Cost had 32 years of senior executive leadership experience at many of the world’s top public companies, including BristolMyers, Squibb, Kodak, ARAMARK, Pharmacia, Wyeth/Pfizer and Centocor/Johnson & Johnson. He was also Chairman of Global Health Care for Washington-based consulting firm, APCO Worldwide. While he was certainly a “corporate guy” of the first order, President Tim Cost was no match for his mentor, the legendary Dr. Fran Kinne, and today, he considers his decision to become President of JU to be one of his best decisions ever.

Since 2013, the University has added more than 50 new programs in health education, engineering, information technology, cyber security, kinesiology and data/computer sciences. The endowment has increased more than 25%, as has the University’s campus footprint. JU is consistently ranked as a premier institution (top 10%) for students’ return on investment and has been selected one of “America’s Best Colleges” by U. S. News & World Report for the past 15 years. CEO Magazine has ranked the University’s Davis College of Business in the Top 25 in the world for value/return on investment. President Cost has led the investment of $80 million into the University’s campus, led a successful $120 million ASPIRE comprehensive development campaign, and has launched the Florida EPIC program to support STEAM education, regional economic investment and job creation.

A 1981 Magna Cum Laude Jacksonville University graduate, President Cost received his MBA in Finance and Economics from the Simon Business School at the University of Rochester and is a graduate of Harvard University's Presidential Leadership Program. As a collegiate athlete, Cost is one of the top 10 winningest pitchers in JU Baseball history, pitching the only 9-inning no-hitter in Jacksonville University history. He received the Jacksonville University Distinguished Alumni Award in 2006, was selected a "Distinguished Dolphin" in recognition of JU's 75th Anniversary and has been named one of Florida's "Most Influential Business Leaders" by Florida Trend and "Guardian of the Arts" by Cathedral Arts. During his decade at JU, President Cost has become an active member of many civic, cultural, education and business boards, chairing several of them. He and his wife of 40 years, Stephanie, are the parents of two children, Melanie and Drew.

Relative to READ USA, President Cost is impressed by the evolution of this powerful force for good. He notes that READ USA's founder Ellen Wiss and CEO Rob Kelly have established meaningful programs and ongoing partnerships that are enhancing the quality of education in Jacksonville. "By marshaling the resources of the community to give students the comfort, confidence and agility they must have around their own set of literacy, READ USA is helping to make this university better equipped and better prepared for the future," Cost says. "We feel strongly here at JU that having comfort with literacy is essential to education. CEO Rob Kelly is a tremendous talent - one of our esteemed former professors, and an outstanding educator to lead READ USA in closing the gap on literacy comprehension."

Honored to be recognized with the READ TO SUCCEED Award, President Tim Cost notes that he is proud to be a fellow traveler with READ USA in "the art of the possible - through literacy - opening the world to students."

READ TO REMEMBER

Dr. Floyd Willis, Mayo Clinic

Dr. Floyd Willis grew up in Forsyth, Georgia, where his father owned and ran the local funeral home and wanted his son to follow in his footsteps. Back in the 1970's, ambulance service was provided by funeral homes and when Floyd's father discovered that only Caucasian funeral directors were getting paid for that service, he approached the county about the obvious racial discrimination and was told the Caucasian funeral directors were paid to be licensed medical technicians and "we didn't think you boys could take the test and pass it." Floyd's dad got other black funeral directors together and they went about becoming licensed medical technicians. "When Dad asked me to help him study the test questions, I really liked the medical aspect - the EKGs, blood pressure, and the rest," Floyd remembers, "So, after Dad passed the test, I told him I'd decided to go into the medical field on the living side."

As a funeral director who was married to an 8th grade English teacher, Floyd's parents were leading citizens in their small town. When voting initiatives and voting drives came along, they had a sample ballot machine in their home that was available to all. Funeral directors were responsible for insurance papers and getting people home from Germany and, as a teacher, Floyd's mother was a leader in education. "Mother had her class memorize poetry and then she brought it home and made me memorize it, too," he recalls. The one Floyd remembers to this day, and has lived by, is titled "Be the Best of Whatever You Are," by Douglas Malloch.

After graduating from Yale University, Dr. Floyd Willis went to medical school at Morehouse College in Atlanta and did his residency at Mayo Clinic in Minnesota. Having always wanted to be a family doctor in a small town, he settled in Carrollton, Georgia and opened his own practice, but in 1992, Mayo Clinic in Jacksonville enlisted him to start the first Department of Family Medicine. There were 100 doctors at Mayo in 1992 and Floyd Willis was the only African American doctor and the only family physician. Today, Mayo Clinic has four Family Medicine sites with over 40 physicians and 20 residents.

Dr. Willis has become widely known for his in-depth research on inclusive Alzheimer's disease and other maladies affecting minorities, and he is also working with the Wilson Scholars Program that exposes mostly under-represented medical students to Mayo Clinic, creating a more diverse staff of physicians. Always a family physician at heart, Dr. Willis still sees patients daily. And, speaking of family, Dr. Willis's wife, Wanda, is a leader at the Community Foundation of Northeast Florida, and they have two successful adult children, Jackson and Joy.

As to being honored with the READ TO REMEMBER Award by READ USA, Dr. Willis is impressed with the teen tutoring program that has been initiated by READ USA. "When my children were growing up, I stressed to them that the most important profession on earth is teaching. That is what READ USA is doing - providing the free books and teaching students how to read and understand them." I've been an adjunct professor in three different medical schools and Mayo attracted me because it was said that we may have the opportunity to begin a teaching program. This was exciting to me," said Dr. Willis. "It is the reading, the learning and the teaching that is really important in everything."

READ TO BE FREE

READ USA is proud to announce that Kevin T. Gay, Founder and retired CEO of Operation New Hope, will receive our 2023 READ TO BE FREE Award, a much-deserved tribute to his never-ending battle for equity and compassion in our criminal justice system.

A native of Jacksonville and a graduate of the University of Florida, Kevin has combined in his highly successful program his strong faith in God and his dedication to helping underserved communities find their way out of addiction, poverty and incarceration. Since founding Operation New Hope in 1999, the organization has achieved such phenomenal advances in providing second chances to formerly incarcerated citizens that it has repeatedly earned national attention. Kevin has been invited to the White House several times during the past two decades and has personally met with Presidents and members of their staff in every administration, serving in several capacities to promote and strengthen Operation New Hope's Ready4Work Re-entry program.

Kevin currently serves on the Board Member of the Kids Hope Alliance and also The Citizens Advisory Board for the Florida Bar. Kevin has served on numerous local and state boards and in 2013, was the only CEO from a non-profit organization to be honored by the Jacksonville Business Journal with the Ultimate CEO Award. In 2015, along with CNN's Van Jones, Kevin hosted Operation Reform in Jacksonville, a national bipartisan summit in criminal justice reform and re-entry solutions. In 2016 Kevin was the Recipient of the 2016 OneJax Humanitarian Award and was selected as the only non-attorney to receive the Medal of Honor Award from the Florida Bar Association. Kevin Gay reached out globally in 2019 when he was invited to South Africa to visit with Dr. Makaziwe Mandela, daughter of Nelson Mandela, and her daughter, Tukwini and then later in 2019 they came to Jacksonville to celebrate Nelson Mandela International Day. Kevin was honored at that time with the House of Mandela Reflecting Freedom Award for Community Impact, with Operation New Hope's Ready4Work program acknowledged as a model program for the world.

As an internationally recognized champion for the cause of criminal justice reform, Kevin believes that READ USA is critical to liberating the next generation from poverty and violence by making books available to all children and, through the teen tutoring program, teaching them to read and appreciate their books.

Today, Kevin Gay credits reading with providing him a gateway of knowledge that has allowed him to converse with people from all walks of life - prisoners to presidents - and to initiate programs that bring about positive change in this world. "When we read to be free, we develop the framework and foundation needed to succeed in life," says Kevin. "I'm excited to be honored by READ USA!"
